“When you look at America today, you see a country awash with saying yes. There is a famous statement that comes from the French student revolt of 1968 when French students scribbled on walls, ‘It is forbidden to forbid.’ That is the situation in America, awash with all sorts of people, saying yes to the weird. The taboos no longer are in place. America has lost the capacity to say no to evil, and that is a very dangerous place to be.”
