'And you now have parents who are actually afraid of their children because they are so coddling and so concerned with their self-esteem that they have lost the ability to parent appropriately,' she said. Her comments came as part of a discussion on the ideas suggested in the book, 'Battle Hymn of the Tiger Mother' by Amy Chua. Said Venker, 'We have gotten away from some the traditional Western approaches to parenting'...She continued. 'Really a lot she's [Chua] calling for is just a return to a philosophy that we in America have gotten away from when it comes to taking care of our kids. It's the move away from the sort of assertive authoritative role of a parent...Venker was invited to appear after producers noticed her article in the New York Post titled 'Why America Needs 'tiger mom'...'Forty years have passed since the so-called women's movement claimed to liberate women from traditional notions of what it means to be female and the results are in. The latest statistics from the National Bureau of Economic Research show that as women have gained more freedom, more education, and more power, they have become less happy..."
