Michael Jordan vs. LeBron James: The key stats you need to know in the GOAT debate

Jordan is superior in the scoring department, but James grabs rebounds and dishes out assists at a higher rate. While both players are known for tenacious defense on the wing, Jordan finished first in the league in steals three times in his career. James has not yet claimed a steals title.

LeBron James graduated from high school a rich man. The high school senior, and expected first pick in the 2003 NBA draft signed a multiyear deal with shoe and apparel maker, Nike, worth over $90 million, a month before he was expected to be selected to play for the Cleveland Cavaliers.

Nike beat out other rivals to sign the 18 year-old who is considered a possible successor to Michael Jordan both on the basketball court and advertising circles.

The deal James received dwarfs any of the previous initial contracts given to a young, unproven player. When Michael Jordan signed his first contract with Nike in 1984, it was $2.5 million dollars over five years, though Jordan had college basketball experience. James is skipping college and has yet to shoot his first jump shot in the NBA.

James says he feels Nike is committed to supporting him throughout his professional career both on and off the court. John Horan, publisher of Sporting Goods Intelligence newsletter says, “There’s no question about it, there is tremendous risk here.”

I guess Nike has a “just do it attitude” here and is willing to take some risk. The truth is, none of us can reach our potential if we do not take calculated risks.

Against the Ice

Simon Abrams March 02, 2022

Coster-Waldau plays Mikkelsen, the haunted sea captain who leads poor naïve mechanic Iver Iversen (Joe Cole) on a perilous journey to a cairn (or a “a stack of stones one can see from far away,” as one character helpfully explains) far away from their ship, the Alabama, and its crew.

Buried within this cairn is a written record of the last Danish expedition’s findings.

That prized document suggests, in no uncertain terms, that Danish explorers, and not the American adventurer Robert Peary, had already discovered Greenland’s Northern-most border, which in turn suggests that the US “has no claim” in the Arctic, as Mikkelsen explains to Iversen.

The Northwest Passage is one of Canada's most exciting chapters of discovery, history and exploration.

The Northwest Passage is a sea corridor connecting the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans through Canada's Arctic Archipelago islands and along the northernmost coast of North America.

Europeans searched for 300 years to find a viable sea trade-route to Asia. Names of adventurers, like Henry Hudson and Sir John Franklin, are etched into the history of the Northwest Passage. The fascinating history has sparked an interest in travellers from around the world. Modern-day explorers are drawn to Canada's High Arctic for the chance to walk in the footsteps of the first Arctic explorers.

Robert Peary

The conquest of the North Pole was for many years credited to US Navy engineer Robert Peary, who claimed to have reached the Pole on 6 April 1909, accompanied by Matthew Henson and four Inuit men, Ootah, Seeglo, Egingwah, and Ooqueah. However, Peary's claim remains highly disputed and controversial.
