

Introduction:

- Examples of Paul's use of "Certainly not!" in this epistle: 3:4, 6, 31; 6:2, 15; 7:7, 13; 9:14; 11:1, 11.
- Paul is not an antinomian ("anti-law" advocates say we don't have to obey God's moral law as Christians). Paul commends God's law as good for us. See Rom 3:31; 13:8-10.
- We are, however, free from the condemnation of the law we experienced in Adam, having died to sin with Christ—being born of God's Spirit & His word. In Christ, there is no condemnation.
- The issue that we come to here is: we are not free from the struggle against sin remaining in us.
- However, sin will not dominate us because of Christ our Lord. We must conquer it by the power of the indwelling Spirit of God & His holy Word.
- Because Paul stated that God's law arouses sinful passions within us, some might argue that the law is evil for doing so. In this section, he argues that the law is not to blame. Rather, the law brings sin out into the spotlight and exposes it for what it truly is—so that we, as believers, might long for Christ Jesus to deliver us from sin's corrupting influence in our lives.
