The City of God

Isaiah 24 is sometimes called “The Apocalypse of Isaiah.” It does not use apocalyptic language so much as eschatological language, however. The plain theme is that the pride of man and the attempt to build a cohesive society based on its own ability and technology with its own moral standards is an utter failure before the God who reigns.

Key thoughts: 1. God is in control and will judge all the earth.

2. The “City of Man” will be exposed for what is – a mere social construct without any transcendent meaning or enduring purpose.

3. God will be glorified before His people and His people will sing praises to Him for all eternity.
